"Corpse Astray – Friday 10 a.m. – 2 p.m."

Corpse Astray

Come play the introductory adventure from the Swords of the Serpentine core book! Someone is stealing corpses, which wouldn't much of a problem if they weren't manufacturing them in the process. Come uncover tragic vengeance, unexpected betrayal, and - if you do it right - prevent the hideous death of thousands. Welcome to Eversink.

Up to six players. No rules knowledge necessary.

Ragamuffins

You're a small band of plucky orphans trying to stay alive in the worst part of a bad city, abandoned and alone. A bully steals the one thing that makes your hovel feel like home, though, and it's up to you to track it down and get it back.

Up to six players. No rules knowledge needed.

Takedown

Sometimes you need to break a few laws to save society. You're six of the most powerful and influential citizens in the city, tasked with eliminating a corrupt magistrate any way you can. Problem is, he's politically untouchable and damned hard to kill. Find his weakness, apply leverage, and make the world a better place. This is an unusual adventure where you have tremendous flexibility to tackle a loathsome judge through creative problem-solving and every nontraditional mean at your disposal.

Up to six players. No rules knowledge necessary.

Smuggler's End

Welcome to the City Watch. Rain or shine you're trudging the streets, risking your life and avoiding paperwork, but the stakes get raised when a murder thrusts you into a high-profile power struggle between some very important people. Can you solve the crime and arrest the murderer without starting a small civil war in the process?

Up to six players. No rules knowledge necessary.

Murder Most Foul

In Eversink, the only thing more dangerous to navigate than storm-tossed seas or narrow alleys is... a noble's masquerade ball? Uncover a murderer, maintain your reputation, embarrass a braggart, maybe frame a rival, and earn your pay as you unravel a mystery that's probably going to get you killed.

Up to six players. No rules knowledge needed.
